What does my regulator say?

Council for Licensed Conveyancers

Some panels are now introducing a fee per transaction. Provided the client has been advised as soon as it becomes apparent that the charge is to be incurred, it is acceptable for that charge to be passed on to the client as an expense (and therefore charged as part of the profit costs due to the practice). However, the CLC's view is that this charge is not a liability incurred to a third party on behalf of a Client and therefore should not be charged to the client as a disbursement.
